Answer: B

Explanation:

Query services like Amazon Athena, data warehouses like Amazon Redshift, and sophisticated data processing frameworks like Amazon EMR, all address different needs and use cases. You just need to choose the right tool for the job. Amazon Redshift provides the fastest query performance for enterprise reporting and business intelligence workloads, particularly those involving extremely complex SQL with multiple joins and sub-queries. Amazon EMR makes it simple and cost-effective to run highly distributed processing frameworks such as Hadoop, Spark, and Presto when compared to on-premises deployments. Amazon EMR is flexible - you can run custom applications and code and define specific compute, memory, storage, and application parameters to optimize your analytic requirements. Amazon Athena provides the easiest way to run ad-hoc queries for data in S3 without the need to setup or manage any servers
