NEW QUESTION: 1

Topic 4, Scenario 4, V1 "Test Management Tool"

A software development company that sells an established capture-replay tool has decided to complement it with a test management tool. The capture-replay tool was developed over a number of years and is used by a large number of clients. The test management tool will be developed by the same team that developed the capture-replay tool, using the same technology. The company test strategy mandates that structural testing is focussed at the component test level and dynamic non-functional testing is focussed at the acceptance test level.

In response to growing customer demand, it is proposed to develop the test management tool in an incremental manner. Each increment will be developed using the V life cycle model. The target platform is a PC in a local area network. The PC uses a proprietary relational database and communicates with a single PC which acts as a server.

The test management tool must interface with the company's capture replay tool. Over the first 12 months of the development period the following functionality will be developed for the tool (in two increments):

basic requirements management, support for test case creation; support for test procedures, test scripts and test suites. The functionality to be included in later increments will be driven by customer demand:

however they expect to provide an incident management system, a web front-end, and interfaces to other proprietary tools and database management systems.

Which of the following would be the most significant input to estimating the time to carry out the specified testing tasks?

- A. The metrics recorded from testing the capture-replay tool.
- B. The number of testers in the company and their grade.
- C. The skills and experience of developers to correct the failures.
- D. The standards used for the requirements specification.

- A. Option A
- B. Option E
- C. Option B
- D. Option D
- E. Option C

Answer: A,E

Explanation:

A: Increasing sequence caches improves instance affinity to index keys deriving their values from sequences. That technique may result in significant performance gains for multi-instance insert-intensive applications.

C: When creating sequences for a RAC environment, DBAs should use the noorder keyword to avoid an additional cause of SQ enqueue contention that is forced ordering of queued sequence values. In RAC, a best practice is to specify the "noordered" clause for a sequence. With a non-ordered sequence, a global lock not required by a node whenever you access the sequence.
