NEW QUESTION: 2

An application has been deployed on a clustered WebSphere Process Server environment using the Remote Messaging and Remote Support pattern. To handle asynchronous invocation problems, the store-and-forward capability is enabled for several applications. During the test phase one of the target services invoked by the application became unavailable. Which of the following statements is TRUE regarding recovery of events?

A. No manual intervention is necessary. If the store-and-forward feature is activated on a single cluster member due to a target service outage, the remaining cluster members will take over and complete the invocation transactions.

B. Multiple failed events might have been created by different cluster members. All failed events must be resubmitted before the Store and Forward widget in the Business Space is set to Forward mode.

C. No manual intervention is necessary. WebSphere Process Server will poll the target service and once it is available, all remaining sequenced events will be automatically processed.

D. A single failed event has been generated by one of the cluster members when the target service became unavailable. Resubmit all failed events once the target service is available.

Answer: B
