NEW QUESTION: 3

You are creating a library of custom tags that mimic the HTML form tags. When the user submits a form that fails validation, the JSP form is forwarded back to the user. The `<t:textField>` tag must support the ability to re-populate the form field with the request parameters from the user's last request. For example, if the user entered "Samantha" in the text field called `firstName`, then the form is re-populated like this:

```
<input type='text' name='firstName' value='Samantha' />

Which tag handler method will accomplish this goal?

```
A. public int doStartTag() throws JspException {
    JspContext ctx = getJspContext();
    String value = ctx.getParameter(this.name);
    if ( value == null ) value = "";
    JspWriter out = pageContext.getOut();
    try {
        out.write(String.format(INPUT, this.name, value));
    } (Exception e) { throw new JspException(e); }
    return SKIP_BODY;
```

private static String INPUT
```

```
= "<input type='text' name='%s' value='%s' />";
```

```
B. public int doStartTag() throws JspException {
```

ServletRequet request = pageContext.getRequest();
String value = request.getParameter(this.name);
if ( value == null ) value = "";
JspWriter out = pageContext.getOut();
try {

} (Exception e) { throw new JspException(e); }
return SKIP_BODY;
