NEW QUESTION: 2HOTSPOT

An organization is deploying a SharePoint farm that will provide a records-management solution.

Users must be able to perform the following actions:

Create in-place holds on content stored in SharePoint and in Microsoft Exchange 2013.

Search for content and place holds based on the search query. You need to create a site collection that meets the requirements.

Which type of site collection should you create? (To answer, select the appropriate template in the answer area.)

Answer:

Explanation:

Note:

* Site holds

SharePoint preserves content on the site level. When you preserve a site, its lists, libraries, and subsites are preserved. If you preserve a root site collection, all documents, pages, lists, and subsites in that site collection are preserved.

To hold a site, create a Discovery Case in the eDiscovery Center. A case is a container for all of the queries, content, and preservations associated with specific litigation. After you create the case, create a Discovery Set to specify the site. To validate the site, just enter its URL address.
