NEW QUESTION: 2

Refer to the exhibit.

By default, why will BGP choose a locally originated route over any iBGP or eBGP learned route?

- A. Locally originated routes have a higher metric.
- B. Locally originated routes have a better AD than eBGP or iBGP routes.
- C. The IGP metric to the next hop is always shorter.
- D. All locally originated routes have a better origin code.
- E. Locally originated routes have a weight of 32, 768.

Answer: E

Explanation:

If you have two routers at the same location, and need to advertise the same internal networks, quite often you will put the same network statements on both routers.

In this case, you would likely have external BGP peers on the routers, but you would also have an internal BGP connection between the two routers.

This would result in each router locally injecting the network via the network statement, but you would also receive an iBGP advertisement from your neighbor within your same AS.

NEW QUESTION: 3

- A. Option A
- B. Option D
- C. Option C
- D. Option B

Answer: A
