NEW QUESTION: 3

Some users are having problems connecting via clientless SSL VPN, while other users are experiencing no problems. What is one possible cause of this issue?

- A. SSL version checking is enabled, and clients are connecting with denied versions.
- B. The Cisco ASA identity certificates have not been generated.
- C. The Cisco ASA identity certificate is not bound to the SSL interface.
- D. SSL VPN termination is not enabled.

Answer: A

Explanation:

http://www.cisco.com/web/about/security/intelligence/05_08_SSL-VPN-Security.html Host identity verification There is a difference between trusting a user (after passing strong user authentication) and trusting that user's computer. While the former has traditionally been emphasized, only recently has the latter been given sufficient attention (see Trusted Platform Module - TPM).

As discussed earlier, a Trojan-laden computer defeats strong user authentication. But a "company computer", which is typically supported and managed according to corporate security policies, typically deserves more trust than a "non-company computer". A secure SSL VPN infrastructure should allow you to verify a remote host's identity by checking on predefined end device parameters.

Examples include registry entries, special files in a specified location, or digital certificates (as a form of device authentication). The host identity information can be used to make your access permission decisions.

NEW QUESTION: 4

DRAG DROP

Drag the ISIS packet types to correct type definition.

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:

There are four general types of packets, and each type can be Level 1 or Level 2.

Intermediate System-to-Intermediate System Hello (IIH)-Used by routers to detect neighbors and form adjacencies. In addition to the IIH, which is an IS-IS protocol data unit (PDU), there is an ISH and an ESH, which are End System-to-Intermediate System (ES-IS) PDUs.

Link-state packet (LSP)-There are four types of LSPs: Level 1 pseudonode, Level 1 nonpseudonode, Level 2 pseudonode, and Level 2 nonpseudonode.

Complete sequence number PDU (CSNP)-CSNPs contain a list of all LSPs from the current database.

CSNPs are used to inform other routers of LSPs that may be outdated or missing from their own database.

This ensures that all routers have the same information and are synchronized. The packets are similar to an OSPF database description packet.

Partial sequence number PDU (PSNP)-PSNPs are used to request an LSP (or LSPs) and acknowledge receipt of an LSP (or LSPs).
