NEW QUESTION: 1

Your network contains a server named Server1 that has the Streaming Media Services server role installed.

Server1 streams content from two folders as shown in the exhibit. (Click the Exhibit button.)

You discover that you can stream content from the public Content folder, but you cannot stream content from the Secure Content folder.

You need to ensure that you can stream content from both folders.

What should you configure?

- A. the WMS Negotiate Authentication plug-in at the server level
- B. the Windows Media Services service
- C. the WMS negotiate Authentication plug-in at the publishing point level
- D. the Windows Audio Endpoint Builder service
- E. the WMS NTFS ACL Authorization plug-in at the publishing point level
- F. the WMS NTFS ACL Authorization plug-in at the server level

Answer: B

Explanation:

Green color means that this folder was encrypted by EFS. Sourcing from an encrypted directory Security concerns may require that you maintain some or all of your content in an encrypted directory. The encryption process encodes the data in a file so that it is unreadable to a computer or account that does not have the appropriate file encryption key. In the Windows operating system, the file encryption key is assigned to an account. Anyone who logs on using that account is then able to decrypt and use the content. Windows Media Services can decrypt and stream encrypted content if it is logged on to the proper account. By default, Windows Media Services logs on to the Network Service account. To access the encrypted content, you must set Windows Media Services to log on to the same account that encrypted the content. You can change the account Windows Media Services uses to log on to the computer by using Microsoft Management Console. For more information about encryption, accounts, and user privileges, see Windows Help and Support.
