NEW QUESTION: 4

The generic strategic costs of vertical integration include:

- 1.Reduction of operating leverage
- 2.Need to overcome mobility barriers
- 3.A decrease in exit barriers
- 4.Loss of access to supplier technology

- A. II, III, and IV only.
- B. I and III only.
- C. I, II, III, and IV.
- D. II and IV only.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Integration is a special case of entry into a new business. Thus, the firm must incur costs to overcome mobility barriers to enter the adjacent business: economies of scale, proprietary technology, capital investment, sources of materials, etc. Integration also increases fixed costs and operating leverage, which is in itself a cause of increased business risk. Thus, an integrated firm is exposed to fluctuations affecting any of its components. For example, sales of an upstream component depend on sales of downstream components. Moreover, integration may increase the difficulty of leaving the industry (exit barriers). Finally, integration may foreclose access to supplier or customer technology. The integrated firm may have to create its own technology rather than taking advantage of supplier/customer expertise.
