Forcing Replication

When you need updates to be replicated sooner than the intersite replication schedule allows, or when replication between sites is impossible because of configuration errors, you can force replication to and from domain controllers.

Forcing replication of all directory updates over a connection
If you want to replicate certain updates, such as a significant addition of new passwords or user accounts, to another domain controller in the domain, you can use the Replicate now option in the Active Directory Sites and Services snap-in to force replication of all directory partitions over a connection object that represents inbound replication from a specific domain controller. A connection object for a server object that represents a domain controller identifies the replication partner from which the domain controller receives replication. If the changes are made on one domain controller, you can select the connection from that domain controller and force replication to its replication partner.

You can also use the Repadmin.exe command-line tool to replication changes from a server to one or more other servers or to all servers.

ssniyer -- In the case where (Exam J, Q24) Repadmin is not an answer option, I will go with AD Sites and Services because it allows to force AD replication across connection objects.

Both DNSLint and nslookup are diagnostic tools. DNSLint is useful to make sure RRs are associated with the right services and nslookup for domain namespace resolution issues. There is no diagnostic need in this question.

Dnscmd is useful to administer/maintain a DNS server or zone using a command line tool. It is also the right tool to create Application Directory Partition. However, I don't see literature to suggest it as a good replication tool for AD integrated zones.
