Explanation:

Answer option C is correct.

Paralingual describes the pitch, tone, and inflections of a message that affect what the message means. In an email, messages can be misunderstood because the paralingual aspects are not present. Jokes and sarcasm often do not translate well to email messages.

Answer option B is incorrect. Noise is anything that distracts communication, such as static on a telephone line.

Answer option D is incorrect. When two or more parties refuse to speak with one another, they are experiencing a barrier to communication.

Answer option A is incorrect. A medium is the intermediary component that carries the message between encoders and decoders. A computer network is a good example of a medium.
