- E. Ancylostoma duodenale

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 3

Refer to the exhibit.

A network administrator receives a call from a contractor that was recently given wireless access to the network. The user reports that the response time is slow and suggests there might be a problem with the WLAN. The network administrator checks RF performance in AirWave to find the user and sees the output shown in the exhibit.

What can the network administrator conclude after analyzing the data?

- A. Client health and SNR are high but usage is low; therefore, there might be packet drops.
- B. Client health and CNR are high, therefore, it is unlikely the client is experiencing an RF-related issue.
- C. Client health is low, which suggests that there are packet drops and collisions in the RF environment.
- D. Goodput is low in relation to connection speed, which suggests a channel with high utilization, another channel should be used.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 4

Refer to the exhibit.

Which two configurations are required on the Cisco ASAs so that the return traffic from the 10.10.10.100 outside server back to the 10.20.10.100 inside client can be rerouted from the Active Ctx B context in ASA Two to the Active Ctx A context in ASA One? (Choose two.)

- A. no NAT-control
- B. TCP/UDP connections replication
- C. policy-based routing
- D. dynamic routing (EIGRP or OSPF or RIP)
- E. ASR-group
- F. stateful active/active failover

Answer: E, F

Explanation:

http://www.cisco.com/en/US/docs/security/asa/asa82/configuration/guide/ha_active_active.html

Configuring Support for Asymmetrically Routed Packets When running in Active/Active failover, a unit may receive a return packet for a connection that originated through its peer unit. Because the ASA that receives the packet does not have any connection information for the packet, the packet is dropped. This most commonly occurs when the two ASAs in an Active/Active failover pair are connected to different service providers and the outbound connection does not use a NAT address. You can prevent the return packets from being dropped using the `asr-group` command on interfaces where this is likely to occur. When an interface configured with the `asr-group` command receives a packet for which it has no session information, it checks the session information for the other interfaces that are in the same group. If it does not find a match, the packet is dropped. If it finds a match, then one of the following actions occurs:

If the incoming traffic originated on a peer unit, some or all of the layer 2 header is rewritten and the packet is redirected to the other unit. This redirection continues as long as the session is active.

If the incoming traffic originated on a different interface on the same unit, some or all of the layer 2 header is rewritten and the packet is reinjected into the stream.
