NEW QUESTION: 4

Which of the following statements about contrary-opinion and smart money technicians is CORRECT?

- A. When investor credit balances are falling, contrary-opinion technicians are bearish.

B. A contrary-opinion technician is bearish when the specialist short sale ratio falls below 30%.

C. A smart-money technician takes a bullish position when the yield spread on high quality versus lower-quality bonds increases from 75 basis points to 150 basis points.

D. A smart-money technician buys when futures traders are bullish on stock index futures.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

When investor credit balances are falling, investors are bullish, so contrary-opinion technicians are bearish.

The other statements are incorrect. Although a specialist short sale ratio less than 30% indicates a bull market, this indicator is followed by smart money technicians. When the yield-differential between high quality and lower-quality bonds widens, the confidence index decreases, and smart-money technicians would be bearish. A widening yield spread is a bearish sign to smart-money technicians because it means that the confidence index has decreased. When 75% or more of futures traders are bullish on stock index futures, contrary-opinion technicians become bearish and sell.

Summary of the indicators for contrary-opinion and smart money technicians:

Contrary-opinion technicians (trade the opposite of the mass of general investors):
