NEW QUESTION: 3

An enterprise developer has received ejb-jars from multiple Bean Providers and wants to combine them into a single ejb-jar as well as altering the method permissions on some of the beans without recompiling any of the code contained in the ejb-jar. Which is correct?

- A. Deployed is the most appropriate role to perform this task.
- B. Application Assembler is the most appropriate role to perform this task.
- C. Bean Provider is the only role that can perform this task.
- D. Either a Deployer or System Administrator role may perform this task.
- E. This problem cannot be solved using an EJB 3.x-compliant approach.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Application Assembler

The Application Assembler combines enterprise beans into larger deployable application units.

The input to the Application Assembler is one or more ejb-jar files produced by the Bean Provider(s). The Application Assembler outputs one or more ejb-jar files that contain the enterprise beans along with their application assembly instructions.

Note:

*EJB Structure

The EJB Java ARchive (JAR) file is the standard format for assembling enterprise beans. This file contains the bean classes (home, remote, local, and implementation), all the utility classes, and the deployment descriptors (ejb-jar.xml and sun-ejb-jar.xml). *The Application Assembler can also combine enterprise beans with other types of application components when composing an application. Reference: Match the seven EJB roles with the corresponding description of the role's responsibilities.
