NEW QUESTION: 1

You are the security administrator for a large network. You want to prevent attackers from running any sort of traceroute into your DMZ and discover the internal structure of publicly accessible areas of the network.

How can you achieve this?

- A. Both A and B.
- B. Block UDP at the firewall.
- C. There is no way to completely block doing a trace route into this area.

D. Block ICMP at the firewall.

Answer: C

Explanation:

When you run a traceroute to a target network address, you send a UDP packet with one time to live (TTL) to the target address. The first router this packet hits decreases the TTL to 0 and rejects the packet. Now the TTL for the packet is expired. The router sends back an ICMP message type 11 (Exceeded) code 0 (TTL--Exceeded) packet to your system with a source address. Your system displays the round-trip time for that first hop and sends out the next UDP packet with a TTL of 2. This process continues until you receive an ICMP message type 3 (Unreachable) code 3 (Port--Unreachable) from the destination system. Traceroute is completed when your machine receives a Port-Unreachable message. If you receive a message with three asterisks [* * *] during the traceroute, a router in the path doesn't return ICMP messages. Traceroute will continue to send UDP packets until the destination is reached or the maximum number of hops is exceeded.

NEW QUESTION: 2

The following is true about the AP installation location?

- A. When wall-mounting or installing under the ceiling, it may be necessary to punch holes. When surveying, try to confirm with the property whether it is feasible.
- B. For aesthetic needs, priority can be given to placing the AP on the ceiling.
- C. If the site is a monolithic ceiling, the AP should be considered as close to the maintenance port.
- D. The material of the ceiling is generally thin, and the impact on the cover is negligible.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 4

What happens if you link a defect to a run? (Select two)

- A. The defect is directly linked to the run and indirectly linked to the run's test instance, the test set, and the test.

- B. The defect is indirectly linked to the test instance and to the test set, but not to the test, because the link to the test instance prevails.
- C. The defect is indirectly linked to the test instance only, as indirect links only propagate to the nearest entity.
- D. The defect is indirectly linked to the run's steps because the run steps are lower-level.
- E. If the corresponding test is covered by a requirement, an indirect link is also added to the requirement.

Answer: B,D
