NEW QUESTION: 3

The Oracle Reference Architecture (ORA) contains both horizontal and vertical architectural layers. Which statements best describe the layers within ORA?

- A. Horizontal layers are used to depict that upper layers build on the capabilities provided by lower layers
- B. Horizontal layers are stateful, whereas vertical layers are stateless.
- C. Horizontal layers are used to signify that the lower layers can be accessed only via the upper layers.
- D. Vertical layers are used to depict enterprise-wide capabilities, whereas horizontal layers departmental capabilities.
- E. Layers only provide a means to partition the capabilities encompassed by ORA and have no significance.
- F. Vertical layers are used to depict capabilities applied across all the horizontal layers.

Answer: A,F

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

B: The horizontal layers illustrate that upper layers build upon or use the capabilities of lower layers.
 Examples: Shared Infrastructure, Information Management, Information Assets, Application Infrastructure C: Layers depicted vertically are orthogonal to the horizontal layers and apply across the entire platform, working in conjunction with horizontal layers to provide a complete solution.
 Examples: Enterprise Development, Enterprise Security, Enterprise Management Note: In order to promote modularity and encapsulation, an architecture will usually be divided into layers.

Each layer has a specific purpose and leverages technologies, standards, and products designed specifically to address that purpose. Layers generally build upon the layers below and provide benefits and capabilities to the layers above. The ORA diagram in the figure below illustrates the many aspects of enterprise computing in the form of horizontal and vertical layers
