NEW QUESTION: 2

Which statement best describes the mapping of User Interaction logical architecture layers to deployment tiers?

- A. The Logical view and Deployment view of the User Interaction architecture do not map effectively from one to the other because other intermediate views are needed.
- B. The web tier and the application tier together map to the client layer, while the data tier is an example of the resource layer component.
- C. The web tier and the application tier together map to the service layer, while the data tier is an example of the resource layer component.
- D. The web tier fulfills the majority of the client layer capabilities; the application tier maps to the service layer; the data tier is an example of the resource layer component.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Note: There are a myriad of ways that the architecture can be deployed within an enterprise.

The types and number of physical servers is determined based on company preferences and expected computational load. The actual products that are used to realize the architecture may also have significant impact on the deployment choices.
