NEW QUESTION: 1

When data discovery is undertaken, three main approaches or strategies are commonly used to determine what the type of data, its format, and composition are for the purposes of classification.

Which of the following is NOT one of the three main approaches to data discovery?

- A. Labels
- B. Content analysis
- C. Hashing
- D. Metadata

Answer: C

Explanation:

Hashing involves taking a block of data and, through the use of a one-way operation, producing a fixed-size value that can be used for comparison with other data. It is used primarily for protecting data and allowing for rapid comparison when matching data values such as passwords. Labels involve looking for header information or other categorizations of data to determine its type and possible classifications.

Metadata involves looking at information attributes of the data, such as creator, application, type, and so on, in determining classification. Content analysis involves examining the actual data itself for its composition and classification level.

NEW QUESTION: 2

A company has several accounts between different teams and wants to increase its auditing and compliance capabilities. The accounts are managed through AWS Organizations. Management wants to provide the security team with secure access to the account logs while also restricting the possibility for the logs to be modified.

How can a sysops administrator achieve this with the LEAST amount of operational overhead?

- A. Store AWS CloudTrail logs in Amazon S3 in each account. Create a new account to store compliance data and replicate the objects into the newly created account.
- B. From the master account create an organization trail using AWS CloudTrail and apply it to all Regions. Use IAM roles to restrict access.
- C. Store AWS CloudTrail logs in Amazon S3 in each account. Create an IAM user with read-only access to the CloudTrail logs.
- D. Use an AWS CloudFormation stack set to create an AWS CloudTrail trail in every account and restrict permissions to modify the logs.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3
