Answer: D

Explanation:

Service control policies (SCPs) offer central control over the maximum available permissions for all accounts in your organization, allowing you to ensure your accounts stay within your organization's access control guidelines.

SCPs alone are not sufficient for allowing access in the accounts in your organization. Attaching an SCP to an AWS Organizations entity (root, OU, or account) defines a guardrail for what actions the principals can perform. You still need to attach identity-based or resource-based policies to principals or resources in your organization's accounts to actually grant permissions to them.

CORRECT: "Create a service control policy in the root organizational unit to deny access to the services or actions" is the correct answer.

INCORRECT: "Create an ACL to provide access to the services or actions" is incorrect as access control lists are not used for permissions associated with IAM. Permissions policies are used with IAM.

INCORRECT: "Create a security group to allow accounts and attach it to user groups" is incorrect as security groups are instance level firewalls. They do not limit service actions.

INCORRECT: "Create cross-account roles in each account to deny access to the services or actions" is incorrect as this is a complex solution and does not provide centralized control
