An overseas branch office within a company has many more technical and non-technical security incidents than other parts of the company. Which of the following management controls should be introduced to the branch office to improve their state of security?

- A. Firewall, IPS and network segmentation
- B. Continuous security monitoring processes
- C. Initial baseline configuration snapshots
- D. Event log analysis and incident response

Answer: B

Explanation:

Continuous monitoring may involve regular measurements of network traffic levels, routine evaluations for regulatory compliance, and checks of network security device configurations. It also points toward the never-ending review of what resources a user actually accesses, which is critical for preventing insider threats.

Incorrect Options:

A: An initial baseline configuration snapshot would allow for the standardized minimal level of security that all systems in an organization must comply with to be enforced. This will not cover the non-technical security incidents.

B: A Firewall, IPS and network segmentation will offer technical protection, but not non-technical security protection.

C: Event log analysis and incident response will not cover the non-technical security incidents.
