NEW QUESTION: 1

You are working in a Microsoft Dynamics 365 for Finance and Operations environment that has a Dock site and a Plant site. The Dock site contains one warehouse, and the Plant site contains three warehouses.

You want to create a new security role. When users assigned to this security role view the InventLocation form, they should only be able to view the warehouse that is in the Dock site. Which security framework should you use to accomplish this goal?

- A. Record-Level Security Framework
- B. OAuth 2.0 Authorization
- C. Extensible Data Security Framework
- D. Table Permissions Framework

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation: Section: Manage the User Interface and Security for Developers (20-25%) Explanation Explanation/Reference:

Data security

Authorization is used to grant access to elements of the program. By contrast, data security is used to deny access to tables, fields, and rows in the database.

Use the extensible data security framework to control access to transactional data by assigning data security policies to security roles. Data security policies can restrict access to data, based on either the effective date or user data, such as the sales territory or organization.

Record-level security, which was a mechanism for securing data in Dynamics AX 2012 and earlier versions, is obsolete.

Extensible data security is the recommended mechanism for securing or filtering data in the program.

Additionally, the Table Permissions Framework helps protect some data. Data security for specific tables is enforced by Application Object Server (AOS).
