NEW QUESTION: 3

Why would a database be denormalized?

- A. To save storage space.
- B. To ensure data integrity.
- C. To prevent duplication of data.
- D. To increase processing efficiency.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Denormalization is the process of attempting to optimize the performance of data storage by adding redundant data. It is necessary because current DBMSs are not fully relational. A fully relational DBMS would be able to preserve full normalization at the logical level, while allowing it to be mapped to performance-tuned physical level. Database designers often justify denormalization on performance issues, but they should note that logical denormalization can easily break the consistency of the database, one of the all-important ACID properties. However, a designer can achieve the performance benefits while retaining consistency by performing denormalization at a physical level; such denormalization is often called caching.
