NEW QUESTION: 4

A company wants to allow its Marketing team to perform SQL queries on customer records to identify market segments. The data is spread across hundred of files. The records must be encrypted in transit and at rest. The Team Manager must have the ability to manage users and groups users and groups, but no team members should have access or resources not required for the SQL queries. Additionally Administrators needed to audit the queries made and receive notifications when a query violates rules defined by the Security team.

AWS organization has been used to create a new account and an AWS IAM user with administrator permissions to the team manager.

Which design meets these requirements?

A. Apply a service control policy (SCP) that allow access to IAM, Amazon S3, and AWS CloudTrail. Store customer records as files in Amazon S3 and train users to leverage the Amazon S3 Select feature and execute queries using the AWS CLI Enable S3 object-level and analyze CloudTrail events to audit and alarm on queries against personal data.

B. Apply a service control policy (SCP) that allows access to IAM, Amazon RDS, and AWS Cloudtrail Load customer records in Amazon MySQL and train users to execute queries using the AWS CLI Stream the query logs to Amazon CloudWatch Logs from the RDS database instance. Use a subscription filter with AWS Lambda functions to audit and alarm on queries against personal data.

C. Apply a service control policy (SCP) that denies access to all services except IAM Amazon DynamoDB and AWS CloudTrail .
