NEW QUESTION: 2

You enter the following command: `crsctl status resource MyApp`

You get this output: `NAME=MyApp`

`TYPE=cluster_resource TARGET=ONLINE STATE=ONLINE on RACNODE4`

MyApp is a policy-managed resource using a server pool with two nodes called RACNODE3 and RACNODE4 and has a cardinality of 1.

What are the meanings of the target and state status values?

A. MyApp is currently active on RACNODE4 and is meant to be active only on RACNODE4.

B. MyApp is meant to be active, is currently active on RACNODE4, but the Grid Infrastructure may start MyApp on RACNODE3 due to failovers.

C. MyApp should also be online on RACNODE3 because it is a `cluster_resources` type that must be active on at least two nodes in the cluster, thereby overriding the `CARDINALITY` attribute.

D. MyApp is active on RACNODE4 and was manually started.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Resource Attributes NAME A case-sensitive alphanumeric string that names the resource. Oracle recommends a naming convention that starts with an alphanumeric prefix, such as `myApache`, and complete the name with an identifier to describe it. A resource name can contain any platform-supported characters except the exclamation point (!) and the tilde (~). A resource name cannot begin with a period (.) nor with the string `ora`.

TYPE

The type of resource indicated when you create a resource. This attribute is required when creating a resource. Local resource: Instances of local resources-type name is `local_resource-run` on each server of the cluster. When a server joins the cluster, Oracle Clusterware automatically extends local resources to have instances tied to the new server. When a server leaves the cluster, Oracle Clusterware automatically sheds the instances of local resources that ran on the departing server. Instances of local resources are pinned to their servers; they do not fail over from one server to another. Cluster resource:

Cluster-aware resource types-type name is `cluster_resource-are` aware of the cluster environment and are subject to cardinality and cross-server switchover and failover.

TARGET

An internal, read-only attribute that describes the desired state of a resource. Using the `crsctl start resource_name` or `crsctl stop resource_name` commands, however, can affect the value of this attribute.

STATE

An internally-managed attribute that reflects the current state of the resource as reported by Oracle Clusterware. The state of a resource can be one of the following:

ONLINE: The resource is online and resource monitoring is enabled (see CHECK_INTERVAL).

OFFLINE: The resource is offline and only offline resource monitoring is enabled, if configured (see OFFLINE_CHECK_INTERVAL).

INTERMEDIATE: The resource is either partially online or was known to be online before and subsequent attempts to determine its state have failed; resource monitoring is enabled (see CHECK_INTERVAL).

UNKNOWN: The resource is unmanageable and its current state is unknown; manual intervention is required to resume its operation. A resource in this state is not monitored.
